

Where are the dead?

There is a common belief that when a person dies he still has the ability to somehow interact with life here on this earth.

Many occult practices are based on this belief.

It's the belief that somehow a person can still influence events which occur in this life.

But whoever believes this has not given it much thought at all.

Just image that you have died, that you have said good-bye to all the people you love and then you wake up fully conscious on the other side of the door of life.

You have walked through this door but you can no longer return. Your body lies there empty of life and you are unable to get back into your body.

The road of return has been closed off forever. But at the same time you are still fully conscious. You can still see and hear everything that goes on in this life. You are still in the midst of life, wondering down the streets you have always known, seeing the faces which are so familiar to you but you can no longer interact with any of them.

You would desperately try to speak to someone but you can't. You want to make your presence known and felt by any means possible but you cannot do so. You can see but no one can see you. You can hear but no one can hear you. You are ignored by everyone around you.

It would not take long before your 'new' life would literally turn into hell on earth. Your loneliness would become so intense, so overpowering as you would desperately try to interact with the people you know but you are no longer able to do so.

Such a life would be opposite of being at 'peace', it would soon turn into literal torture.

And yet millions of people believe in this 'afterlife'.

Roman Catholics believe that their 'saints' are still present with them, that are able to listen to them and hear their prayers. They believe that they can pray to those saints with the false assurance that they can hear them and that they will be able to help them as well.

But whoever has prayed to such a 'saint' has obviously never thought about the implications of their prayer. They have never thought about the terrible state of existence which this 'saint' must be in now. They don't really realize that this 'saint' can hear them for he still floats around in this world looking out for the prayers of Roman Catholics in need. What a terrible existence they have to endure!

They can hear, they can see but they can't speak and they cannot make their presence known. They are unable to interact like any real person.

If this is the reward for a 'saintly' existence on earth, then why would anyone bother?

Those saints are already living in hell!

But millions of Roman Catholics, including the Pope and his Bishops have no problems believing such utter nonsense. They certainly got it wrong once again.

If this is the reward for being a saint it's better to enjoy the life of a sinner!

It's becomes clearly obvious that whenever we believe such nonsense we are only focus on ourselves.

We believe that all life centers around us. We believe that even the dead still live in our presence because we are important.

Not only does this life, this universe center around us but even the world beyond is still focused on us.

This is the ultimate expression of selfishness!

But the fact is that this is all build on speculation which can never be supported by fact. Someone had a dream or a crazy idea and millions followed.

There is no reliable source, no reliable data which can support this 'speculation'.

We would only know for certain if someone would have returned from the dead to support such a 'myth'.

A NDE (near death experience) is never the same as death itself.

2000 year ago someone did come back from the dead.

After having been buried for days, having had his grave sealed with a monstrous stone he left his grave behind empty.

Jesus had died the most brutal, the most inhumane death and was buried.

But all that he left behind for us was an empty grave.

Jesus made it very clear what happens when a person dies.

He told us that he will move on to a place from where there is no return.

The gap between this life and the next is so wide, so gigantic that no one can cross it.

Once a person has died his contact with life on this side is cut off forever.

He cannot hear us, he can't see us and he is unable to interact.

Once a person has passed on he is so far removed from this life that it is impossible to get in touch with anyone on this side of life.

Whenever someone believes something else, his belief is based on pure speculation. It can never be based on fact!

The dead no longer reside on this side of life; once they have died they have left us for good.

The truth is, all the graveyards are empty!

They only contain boxes which are slowly turning to dust. None of them contain any traces of life.

The spirit of a person has long left. A dead person would not even know where his coffin is buried.

Jesus said that there are only 2 places that a person will end up in once he has died.

He either will end up in heaven, in a place of joy and bliss, in the presence of God (and in His new creation which will be even better than His old creation on earth) or he will be cut off from Him and from His creation forever.

Jesus preached much more about hell than he did about heaven.

The reason why he did this was because he wanted to warn people of the serious consequences of making the wrong choices in life.

It's easy to ignore God during our life. As long as things are going our way, as long as we live in comfort we have no need for God.

We can afford to live without Him but no one of us can afford to die without Him. A life of eternity cut off from God means living in a life of complete loneliness, existing in darkness deprived of His beauty and of his creation forever!

Be wise in the choices you make!
